

“The Fire Horse favors the bold. This is the year to move forward with courage, grace, and confidence.”

2026 IS THE YEAR OF THE FIRE HORSE

In the cosmologies of Mongolia, Tibet, parts of southern Siberia and Central Asia, the return of the Fire Horse marks the completion of a 60-year cycle — a powerful turning of time that carries intensity, momentum, and profound potential for transformation. The last Fire Horse year was 1966. Its return in 2026 invites us to pay close attention to how energy is moving, where it is being directed, and what kind of future we are actively creating.

The Fire Horse is associated with vitality, speed, passion, and force. It can ignite renewal and courage, but it can also magnify instability when power is ungrounded or misused. Across shamanic, earth-based traditions, times of heightened energy are understood not as guarantees of change, but as tests of responsibility. What we feed grows. What we neglect falls aside.

We are living in an era shaped by rapid ecological, cultural, and spiritual shifts. Old systems and structures are strained and showing their weakness. In these times, shamanic and lineage based traditions remind us that power without relationship causes harm, and action without discernment is a waste of energy. Those who are familiar with fire know that it must be tended, not unleashed.

Shamanism, in its many forms around the world, arose to help communities navigate times like these. Not as a belief system or identity, but a practice of service, grounded in integrity and accountability. Shamans and Medicine People have long been trained to work with volatile forces, to restore balance, and to help communities remain in right relationship with the living world.

We see this year as a call to maturity. As interest in shamanic, lineage based wisdom continues to grow, so too does the need for discernment, ethics, and care. Not all teachings are meant to be shared freely. Not all experiences confer authority. And not all power is meant to be amplified.
